OWENSMOUTH, CAL., FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1918.

Owensmouth needs a church, a club house, a justice court, a jail, a fire department, a resident representative of the water department, more street trees.

Why should irrigators in the west end of the valley travel from ten to fifteen miles (twenty to thirty miles the round trip) to order water? A resident zanjero is needed for this end of the valley.

Owing to extra work in connection with the Draft Exemption Board the Gazette is short on local news this week. The Questionnaires have all been mailed and the work of classifying registrants will be completed in a few days.

President Wilson's Special Message to Congress on the European War should be read carefully by every American. In plain terms the war aims of the United States are set forth, and in words of unmistakable meaning the only conditions under which the Allied Nations can accept peace with Germany are stated. President Wilson's views are in full accord with those of Premier Lloyd George of England, whose recent Peace Message stirred the whole civilized world.

The officials of the Los Angeles Water Department deserve hearty commendation for the liberal policy they have adopted regarding irrigation water. The half-rate now in effect will encourage the farmers to saturate the land thoroly in preparation for planting beets, beans and other crops. The lack of rain is working serious hardship on the farmers of Southern California and unless conditions change soon the drought will prove a calamity to the entire Southwest. In view of the fact that a large volume of Aqueduct water has for some time been running to waste, while thousands of acres of land in the San Fernando Valley are too dry to permit the planting of crops, the granting of the reduced rates is most timely. The drought is a calamity for which no one is to blame—then why compel the farmer to bear the entire loss? Why not extend on the general public—the city as the Water Department will not operate, as the lower rate will lead charges—and the waste water bring the city any revenue. The broad view of the situation and bring about the desired change in the Mayor Woodman, Councilmen, and Water Department Officials

RUSSIA'S BASTILE.

The Grim Old Fortress of Sinister Memories in Petrograd.

Petrograd's bastille, the fortress of Sts. Peter and Paul, is a huge mass of stone on the banks of the Neva opposite the Winter palace. It is a place of sinister memories.

Within its walls Peter the Great tortured his son Alexis to death. The Princess Tarakanova, immured in a cell which was flooded during an inundation, found rats climbing on her to save themselves from drowning. It was in the fortress of Sts. Peter and Paul that Catherine II buried alive the unhappy people who ventured to object to the murder of her husband.

Torture of a more refined nature has been employed upon its prisoners in recent years. Prince Kropotkin tells how the revolutionary Karakozoff was kept awake for a week at a time, guards sitting on either side of him to stir him up when he showed signs of falling asleep. The unhappy man at last acquired the art of swinging his leg while he slept so as to delude his guards that he was awake, but they detected the trick. As a result of this treatment Karakozoff, when he was at last led out for execution, was in such a state of collapse that it seemed as though his body did not contain a bone unbroken, and the rumor ran that his jailers had killed him in his cell and brought out an India rubber doll for the scaffold.

Kropotkin himself spent some unhappy years in the fortress in the seventies. The floor and fire-foot thick walls were alike covered with felt, so that the silence became unbearable. Kropotkin, however, had a happier lot than some, for he was permitted, at the request of the Geographical society of Russia, to continue his work on the glacial period. Pens and ink were provided for his use by special permission of the czar, but they could only be used up to the hour of sunset, which in a Russian winter is 3 o'clock.

Johnnie on the Spot.

The young teacher had been having a trying time with her mature study class because Johnnie had discovered he knew more than she did about birds and frogs and had assumed a derisive attitude in consequence. She appealed to the class practical, who replied: "Next time you have the class let me know, and I'll come in and take charge of it. I think I can settle Johnnie."

He was duly called in, and all went well at first. With confidence the principal said at the conclusion of the lesson: "Now you may ask me one question." Johnnie had been silent up to this time. When it came his turn he rose and asked: "Was a duck eye-brow?"—New York Times.

THE SURE DOPE

WHEN you see a tree standing out in a field you know that it draws one part of its sustenance from the air and the other part from the ground. The cells of our bodies are produced in this same way. One part from the air and the other from the ground. When our cells obtain too much from the air our bodies become fat and rotund and too much from the earth we become lean and slim.

You know how thrifty and healthy it makes the tree when it receives the right amount of water? When we eat our fruits fresh off the trees and vegetables out of the ground, it makes our blood and nerves as vigorous as the sap of a tree. Raw food causes the cells of the body to call for exactly the right amount of water they need every day.

When the tree obtains the most of its moisture from the air by its leaves its sap flows upward to the top of the trunk, but if the most moisture comes up from down in the ground then the sap of the tree flows up through the herbage in the soil. In tilting our trees the main object should be to increase this heart flow. As the flow of sap proceeds in the downward direction it produces oxygen, and if the flow is up it produces acid.

Now the word "oxygen" means to generate and become formed into globular cells; and "acid" indicates a number of cells which are inactive. "Active" means alive and "ox" means without action. So as the sap flows upward through the tree it circles around from the west toward the east and takes up the moisture in the early part of the day; but in the afternoon the sap flows around from east to west and gives our organisms the dry and parched atmosphere.

When the cells have become so thoroughly wound or twisted that they can neither take in nor give out any more moisture they are collected and stored in receptacles known to us as fruit. Then we eat the fruit and combine it with water in order to produce muscle action. And it is the waste that is produced by the muscle action that produces warmth of our bodies. It is this friction and acid from the muscles that is able to dissolve fruit sugar and combine it into new cells. The new cells are pure red but the fruit cells are green and red; but the fruit of grafed or budded trees only be yellow and white.

When we consume fruit that is yellow or white our cells are almost at a standstill, or without life, but the yellow produces a very low degree of life while white contains no life at all unless we admit the forces which are borrowed from the red or green. To eat white alone is to invite disease microbes and germs that may get a start because the vital resistance of white or yellow is low. Trees are never attacked by parasites unless they suffer for moisture so that their bark and wood becomes whitened. But in grafed and budded trees the sap is always whiter than the natural by the buds and grafts being taken from the branches of another tree.

Fruit cells are exactly round in shape, but if the tree suffers for moisture a part of the woody and horny substance of the tree is drawn into the fruit and gives it a bitterness like the green on potatoes which have lain in the sun, before they are eaten but in fruit the bitterness is formed after it is eaten with bread, meat or other cooked foods. Heat drives out the silica of the fruit and the rounded cells become elongated in the form of needles a thousand times as sharp as cactus spines on both ends and sharpened bars all along the sides, where they attempt to feed the hungry flesh. Hell or heaven are both in the same tree.

SHE WON THE BET

By PAULINE D. EDWARDS

Jim Underwood and his sister, Carrie, were at breakfast when the morning mail was delivered. Jim opened the letter which seemed to please him greatly. "My old chum, Charlie MacKnight, has said, 'whom I haven't seen for five years, is to pass through the city tomorrow on his way to Montreal. He asks me to meet him at the Union station for a handshake.'"

"If I were ready to go north tomorrow instead of Thursday," said Carrie, "it would be a good chance for an escort, wouldn't it?"

"Can't you get ready?"

"I'll see. I think I can."

"Charlie says he has heard that I've been married. I wonder where he got that?"

Carrie seemed to be lost in thought for a while; then she said:

"Is this the Mr. MacKnight that you have said is the son of honor?"

"Yes."

"The name that you had the conversation with about being so awfully particular as to his treatment of a friend's wife?"

"Yes. He once said to me that if I were married it would be his duty for her to tempt him into a love affair with him."

"Humph! was Carrie's only reply. "You consider that boob?" asked her brother.

"I'll tell you what to do, Jim. This sargeon has heard that you have been married, introduced him to my sister's wife. I'll bet you a pair of gloves against a box of candy that I send you around at the end of the journey that he is not so desperately honorable as you suppose."

"Do you go up here at once?"

No explanation was given, so that Jim was obliged to infer one. The natural inference was that the sargeon had been taken suddenly ill or had met with an accident. The bet was forgotten in the more serious situation.

Throwing a few things in a suitcase, he called on his sister and hurried to the station, where he sent a telegram to his sister to wire him at an intermediate place for further information. To his astonishment he received the following:

"Your friend has married."

This disclosed the illness or accident theory. But what could MacKnight have been doing to bring about such a condition?

Jim arrived at his destination in the evening and was met by the house of a friend of his sister, whom she was visiting. He was expected and he found a note in a room which he had called Carrie waiting for him. She was the picture of health, but looked very much worried.

"For heaven's sake," exclaimed Jim, "what's the matter?"

"What has he done?"

"I'll tell you and first let it hit the bit, you know—and the first thing I know he was wearing a suit."

"I told him he shouldn't say such things to his friend's wife. We were just pulling in the train when he said that, and he got up and rushed from the car like a crazy man. I want you to find him at once and tell him."

"Why do that?"

"Because I don't want him to think I'm a bad woman."

"Nonsense! You've won the bet."

"Yes, but I don't want to."

Jim looked at his sister wonderingly, then said:

"I've only better, Carrie, you've been wined yourself."

"You go right off and find Mr. MacKnight and explain and say I'm very sorry for what has happened."

"How do I know where to find him?"

"He mentioned during the journey that he intended staying at the Lenox hotel."

Underwood that evening appeared at the Lenox hotel and, before long, he was in the room where Charlie MacKnight was in his room, when he was knocked at the door and was admitted. MacKnight was walking toward the door like one suffering from delirium. On seeing Underwood he paled, then, having his breath, said:

"Kill me, Jim! I deserve worse than death!"

Jim burst into a loud laugh, threw himself into a chair and continued to laugh till he was interrupted by MacKnight saying:

"What in thunder are you laughing at?"

When Jim found his voice he told of the story of the bet, in which it appeared that Carrie was Jim's sister instead of his wife. As soon as this phase of the matter appeared MacKnight fished Jim in his arms.

"Come along," said the latter. "Charlie is in bed and is as good as dead."

"All right; but Jim, you've been traveling and need rest. Don't trouble yourself further. Make no matter. It's too bad to have called you on your feet on such an errand. I'll call on your sister at once, and I darsay the matter will be—"

"I don't doubt it."

The settlement took place and was followed by a wedding.

True.

"I understand the nurse he served a short term in prison. Yet he had redeemed himself and lived it down absosolutely."

"Well, he would have lived it down if it wasn't for the fool's like you and me who continually kept digging it up for conversation purposes." Detroit Free Press.

Dark Ages

The dark ages was the period of European history beginning with the irruption of barbarian hordes before the fall of the western Roman empire in A. D. 476, extending to the Italian Renaissance (thirteenth century) and characterized by the decay of civilization.
