CIRCUIT WITH GRID LEAK RESISTANCE

Takes Place of "C" Battery—How Impedance of Flow is Determined.

Fig. 13 shows a grid leak resistor for a direct-current voltage tube circuit connected, grid leak resistance as shown in Fig. 11 instead of a "C" battery with the same arrangement of electrical elements as applied to the grid circuit.

There being no "C" battery potential applied to the grid, the grid in Fig. 13 is normally at zero potential with respect to the filament. As the positive half of the first cycle of the alternating difference of potential is impressed upon the grid circuit, the grid is raised to a positive potential.

With respect to the filament. Being positive with respect to the filament, says a certain number of electrons, which are negative charges, to be attracted and caused to give up their negative charges to the grid. During the rest or negative half of the cycle of the applied grid potential the grid is made negative with respect to the filament but does not take the electrons again. Thus a negative charge is built up on a grid during the positive portion of each cycle, the cumulative effect of which is to produce a decrease of the plate current, during the period that the attracting difference of potential could not be again applied to the grid.

After the alternating difference of potential is applied to the grid, the grid has its negative charge, the grid has its negative charge. The grid has its negative charge, the grid has its negative charge. The grid has its negative charge, the grid has its negative charge.

USING ELECTRIC LIGHT WIRE

Experts. Test the Date Wire to Embody This System for Radio Receiving.

Since the assumption that the losses of electricity of the movement of electrons had performed a hundred of negative charges, the wire is placed in series, maintaining approximately the same as the usual amount, plus of about 10 to 15 volts, and the condition of an grid leak is approached.

In any electrical circuit that has a voltage of potential applied to it, the current that will flow depends upon the resistance of the circuit. Just as the flow of water through a pipe, the quantity of water that will flow when any given pressure is applied depends upon how much the friction of the pipe is impeded by the friction of the particles of water against the sides of the pipe and against one another.

In the electrical circuit, the relation between these three quantities is that the current which will flow is equal to the applied difference of potential divided by the resistance where the circuit is to be applied. The applied difference of potential is the voltage and the impedance is ohms. Oh impedance is equal to the impedance in ohms to the square of the impedance divided by the current. The impedance of a vacuum tube plate circuit is the impedance between the filament and the plate, when the grid is at zero potential, is an important constant of a vacuum tube and is called the internal plate impedance.

The internal grid impedance of a vacuum tube used in a radio set as a detector determines the impedance of the telephone that will give best results when connected to the plate circuit of that particular tube.

It is then not only the resistance of a pair of telephones, but also the inductance and the distributed capacitance of the telephone that are the essential elements to be in the telephone circuit. The internal plate impedance of a vacuum tube is a constant of the tube, which is determined by the design.

"Eat Meat and Be Strong"

That was the advice of Dr. Keck, one of the most famous scientists of the world he ever knew. He recommended meat and the juices obtained from it by various methods of cooking, for well people to keep them well, and for the ailing to give them strength and vigor. When you sensibly limit your meat ration, you limit health and strength proportionately—if the meat is good, fresh, wholesome meat such as may always be found at

“Off the Hook”
 When your telephone is accidentally left “off the hook,” the operator first answers as if you were placing a call. If repeated efforts receiving no response, she reports your line as “out of order.” It is then disconnected from the regular switchboard and placed on a special board where it awaits the attention of the repairing forces.
