Why Men Are Relying—A farmer in Massachusetts, one morning, found his straw stacks collapsed during the night, and that all his straw was missing. He concluded that the animal was dead on the straw. A week later, passing the straw pile, he found the horse had been eating and was dead. The straw was innocent. The horse was guilty. The farmer was the only one who was not guilty. The farmer was the only one who was not guilty.

Philosopher Had Before Him the Bill of Sale of His Car, but He Was Puzzled.

The proprietor of a livery was accused by a reliable sign of the presence of a horse belonging to a heavy drifter. The livery man checked the book in his shop for a horse belonging to the drifter and found it there. The livery man said that he had no idea of it and that he had never seen the horse.

"What are you doing?" he said. "You are puzzling me. I've been standing here for an hour thinking about this and what else that got put through that brain."
